documenting the living in a babylon

Yesterday film maker Theo van Gogh was murdered brutally near his house in the city of Amsterdam. Van Gogh was a big fan of the popular murdered politician Pim Fortuyn and was currently shooting a movie in which the American government and shadowy groups took part in a conspiracy against Pim Fortuyn.

This idea is not originally van Gogh's idea, many people in the Netherlands think that way.

Van Gogh also released a provocative movie about women abuse and Islam in which naked women were portrayed having scars and Koran scriptures on their skins.

The killer shot van Gogh while he was riding on his bicycle in Amsterdam. Apparently van Gogh was not dead yet as he begged for mercy after which the killer used two knives to finish his bloody act of murder. The police chased him and caught him.

Apparently he is a Muslim extremist, or labeled as such by the minister of justice in the Netherlands.

This is the second political murder in the Netherlands in a very short period of time and they are both related to the tension that the globalists create between the so-called Muslim fundamentalists and the so-called free people. And they are both related to the military industrial complex.
